This week provides us with a couple good reasons to go to Bushwick, a couple good reasons to consider fucking (if needed), and no excuses to miss this weekend's Creative Time Summit (it's livestreaming). We'll also be attending a seminar on erasing bad memories and a film on 1970s gentrification. It's a strange week.

“Digital Labor: Sweatshops, Picket Lines, Barricades”

In conjunction with the Summit, New Yorkers can also attend live talks at the New School, titled “Digital Labor: Sweatshops, Picket Lines, Barricades” featuring activist intellectuals such as The Verge writer (http://www.theverge.com/users/Molly__o) Molly Osberg, writer (http://worker01.e-flux.com/pdf/article_8978426.pdf) and artist Tyler Coburn, and activist (<http://www.hiddendriven.com/projects/ideas>) artist Astra Taylor. You can find the schedule for both the Summit and the Digital Labor conference here (<http://digitallabor.org>).

The Flat Files: Year Two

Set to move after this show, Tiger Strikes Asteroid hosts their final show at 44 Stewart Ave, an open call exhibition drawn from their flat files program. Presumably, this means a large group show of prints and drawings. The resulting artist list provides an overview of emerging art so large that it's a must-see. Artists include:

Ali Osborn, Anne Russinof, Beth Livensperger, Brian Cypher, Charmaine Ortiz, Christopher Gideon, Christopher Ho, Elizabeth Ferrill, Elizabeth Livingston, Emily Berger, Erin O'Brien, Evan Venegas, Gregory Slick, Hannah Cole, Jacquelyn Gleisner, Jason Mones, Jeff Fichera, Jonathan Cowan, Jonathon Cancro, Jordan Buschur, Kristin Richards, Lindsey Landfried, MaDora Frey, Margaux Ogden, Melissa Staiger, Peter Schenck, Robert Otto Epstein, Sarajo Frieden, Scott Dickson, Sophia Chai, Terence Hannum, Theresa Daddezio and Will Hutnick.
